Report from July 23 Meeting Continued

Steve Collins is happy that Kristina Hansen wants to join us. Steve remembers a club meeting in the 1970s when representatives from NOW (National Organization for Women) spoke and then one of our members remarked: I still don't understand what you girls want.

Program

Kristin Olsen, chairwoman of the Stanislaus County Board of Supervisors, provided an update on COVID 19 in our community. She said the county Health Services Agency Dashboard (available at <http://schsa.org/PublicHealth/pages/corona-virus/>) has all of the key numbers regarding cases, testing, etc. It now has a tutorial to explain the numbers.

The county has more than 7,000 people who have tested positive and has had 77 deaths. Early in the pandemic most of the deaths were among residents of skilled nursing facilities. Today they represent only about half of the deaths. As of this morning, there were 266 confirmed and suspected COVID positive patients in Stanislaus hospitals, 55 of them in ICUs. Adult ICU beds are at capacity.

Kristin said the hospitals could add more beds but the challenge is staffing. Hospitals have nurses who cannot work because they are out with symptoms that might be COVID. The county is trying to arrange for rapid tests to learn whether they can come back to work.

The hospitals also are experiencing higher numbers of staff on leaves of absences, some because those employees need to be home with children. Hospitals are bringing in traveling nurses and the county is meeting with FEMA reps about getting additional help. At least one hospital has sent overflow patients to Manteca and San Jose.

Contact tracing is also challenging, in part because it takes so long to get test results. Currently the county is focusing on outbreaks in congregate living centers and workplaces.

Kristin talked about the county's plans for distributing money from the federal government, with the bulk going to businesses but also to non-profits and some to encourage consumers to patronize local restaurants/businesses.

Before the pandemic, Kristin had other issues she wanted to address in her final year on the board:

1. Community development -- The Crows Landing business park and creating a tech hub
2. Trying to reduce blight and illegal dumping
3. Community building – bringing people of disparate backgrounds together.

Most of the follow-up discussion seemed to focus on blight and homeless issues.
