Denton Camera Exchange, Arman Kohandani

Denton native Arman Kohandani has developed quite a following in his effort to keep the art of photography alive.

A graduate of Ryan High School and UNT, Kohandani focused on a local need for processing and printing film. Denton Camera Exchange, located two blocks west of the downtown square, is filled with 35 mm cameras, camera bags, tripods, and even vinyl records.

A former professional photographer in Denton, Kohandani bought the former Yarbrough Pharmacy building and remodeled it, opening 14 years ago. His parents opened nearby Mi Casita in 1996.

Along with printing film, Kohandani fixes cameras and restores old photos that have faded. He blamed faded photos on photo paper that used emulsion that didn't last.

"Temperature and time are two big enemies" to photographs, he said.

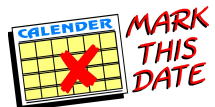

Along with old photographs, Kohandani can take VHS tapes and digitize them for posterity. He said he doesn't work with audio tapes, but recommends taking audio tapes to The Panhandle House at 313 N. Locust St. if people want them digitized.
